How to Use New York State Shared Work Programs

Shared Work is a program that was created by the New York Department of Labor (DOL) to give employers an alternative to employee layoffs. It allows employers to reduce the amount of hours worked by a group of employees, rather than reduce the number of employees. DOL then allows the employees whose hours and wages are reduced to receive some unemployment benefits to partially offset their lost wages.

Eligibility

Employers must meet two preliminary requirements to apply for the Shared Work program. First, they must employ two (2) or more full-time workers. Second, they must have been liable for unemployment insurance for at least four (4) consecutive calendar quarters.

The Basics

The Shared Work program is intended to allow employers to reduce employees' hours and wages in lieu of employee layoffs. The idea is to allow employees to share in the loss of work. To this end, if you choose to participate in a Shared Work program, you must demonstrate that your organization is avoiding layoffs by participating in the program.

Only full-time employees who generally work no more than 40 hours per week are eligible to participate. A Shared Work program will generally reduce hours for all full-time employees or for a class of full-time employees. For example, an employer may choose to reduce the wages and hours of all full-time employees in a single department or work group. Because the Shared Work program is not intended to supplement part-time work, employers generally cannot create programs that reduce the wages and hours of only one person, even if a department consists of only one employee.

A Shared Work program must cut employee hours by at least 20 percent, and no more than 60 percent. These hours must be cut on a weekly basis. Additionally, a Shared Work program cannot cut or eliminate employees' fringe benefits.

Ideal candidates for the Shared Work program are organizations that are experiencing a temporary lag in funding; the Shared Work plan cannot last longer than 53 weeks. Individual employees may receive up to twenty-six times their weekly benefit rate in one year. These organizations' budget shortfalls are the result of temporary economic conditions, rather than signs of a chronic fiscal shortfall.

How to Apply

To apply for the program, employers must submit applications for Shared Work three to four weeks before the date in which the plan is to begin. To file an application, employers may visit <https://dol.ny.gov/shared-work-program-0> and follow these steps:

Click on “Apply” under “Employers,” then under “Employer Application” select “UI Online Services.” Sign in with your NY.Gov ID, or follow the directions to create a NY.Gov ID. After signing in, select “View My UI Information” on the “Perform Work for my Company” page. Click on the “Shared Work” button on the bottom left.

Once I apply, when can I start cutting employee hours?

The Shared Work plan you submit to DOL should specify a start date. The plan will commence on the specified start date, or on the first Monday following DOL’s approval of the plan, whichever is later. Applications should be submitted at least three weeks prior to your desired start date in order to ensure they are approved in time.

What increments can I use to cut hours?

Employers must reduce work hours on a weekly basis. For example, you can reduce the workweek to four days from five, or you can reduce the workday to five hours from eight. However, you cannot reduce work hours by one week per month.

Can I hire additional people while on a Shared Work plan?

Employers cannot hire any additional employees for the department or group covered by a Shared Work plan. However, employers can replace any employees that depart while the plan is in place.

Once on a Shared Work plan, what are my continuing obligations?

Employers must complete a bi-weekly Shared Work continued claim form for each employee receiving Shared Work benefits.
